RecordClick Enhances Product Offerings with Legacy Books

Legacy Books Allow Genealogists to Preserve Family History for Generations to Come

Denville, New Jersey – RecordClick.com is announcing its plan to add Legacy Books to its genealogy research services and offerings. Using artistic layouts, professional genealogists at RecordClick compile scanned photographs, documents, timelines, textual summaries, and other ancestor search memorabilia to create a printed Legacy Book that serves as a personal family history publication – one that can be touched, read, and handed down through generations. The production is interactive, allowing customers to view the progress and have input on additions and changes as the book is being developed online.

"We took the cue from our customers, many of whom are family history researchers," says Elizabeth Khan, Founder and CEO of RecordClick. "The family genealogists keep telling us that they want a tangible product that showcases their family history in a vibrant and engaging fashion. We think the Legacy Book is the perfect solution, so we added it to our genealogical services."

A typical Legacy Book begins with a multi-generation pedigree. Also included is a family group sheet for each ancestral couple, a timeline for each direct ancestor (set against an historical timeline of the major world events corresponding with that person's life), and generational divider pages. Customers can include as many documents as they wish, such as birth and marriage certificates, military documents, immigration, and naturalization records. Summaries of the information are included on the side of the page for easy reading.

"We find that our clients are ordering Legacy Books for anniversaries, birthdays, and especially reunions," explains Khan. "Genealogy Research has truly come full circle – from hardcopy documents to online research and now to a printed Legacy Book. RecordClick is just glad to be the genealogy research service that offers it."
